

CHATEAU DU CEDRE

(Cahors)

Only founded in 1956, this estate is today widely regarded as the reference point for the appellation. The cuvee Heritage is made from the traditional Cahors grape of Malbec (known as Cot locally) blended with a little Merlot. The wine is deep purple in color, full-bodied with a nose and palate sporting coffee and spice notes along with plum and damson fruit. Once known as 'black wine' for its deep color, it was greatly prized, and shipped throughout Europe. In fact it was Cahors, not Bordeaux, that first made the fortune of the port of Bordeaux.

CHATEAU DU CEDRE

(Cahors)

Only founded in 1956, this estate is today widely regarded as the reference point for the appellation. The cuvee Heritage is made from the traditional Cahors grape of Malbec (known as Cot locally) blended with a little Merlot. The wine is deep purple in color, full-bodied with a nose and palate sporting coffee and spice notes along with plum and damson fruit. Once known as 'black wine' for its deep color, it was greatly prized, and shipped throughout Europe. In fact it was Cahors, not Bordeaux, that first made the fortune of the port of Bordeaux.

CHATEAU DU CEDRE

(Cahors)

Only founded in 1956, this estate is today widely regarded as the reference point for the appellation. The cuvee Heritage is made from the traditional Cahors grape of Malbec (known as Cot locally) blended with a little Merlot. The wine is deep purple in color, full-bodied with a nose and palate sporting coffee and spice notes along with plum and damson fruit. Once known as 'black wine' for its deep color, it was greatly prized, and shipped throughout Europe. In fact it was Cahors, not Bordeaux, that first made the fortune of the port of Bordeaux.

CHATEAU DU CEDRE

(Cahors)

Only founded in 1956, this estate is today widely regarded as the reference point for the appellation. The cuvee Heritage is made from the traditional Cahors grape of Malbec (known as Cot locally) blended with a little Merlot. The wine is deep purple in color, full-bodied with a nose and palate sporting coffee and spice notes along with plum and damson fruit. Once known as 'black wine' for its deep color, it was greatly prized, and shipped throughout Europe. In fact it was Cahors, not Bordeaux, that first made the fortune of the port of Bordeaux.