

HOFGUT FALKENSTEIN

SAAR RIESLING

Erich Weber and his son Johannes make some of the most refreshing wines in the world. From bracingly dry to delicately sweetish they exemplify Riesling at its best: never chaptalized, whole-bunch pressed, aged on its lees, bottled by hand (each cask separately). They are not showy wines, quite the opposite. But with every sip you see more purity and nuance. We drink them whenever we can.

HOFGUT FALKENSTEIN

SAAR RIESLING

Erich Weber and his son Johannes make some of the most refreshing wines in the world. From bracingly dry to delicately sweetish they exemplify Riesling at its best: never chaptalized, whole-bunch pressed, aged on its lees, bottled by hand (each cask separately). They are not showy wines, quite the opposite. But with every sip you see more purity and nuance. We drink them whenever we can.

HOFGUT FALKENSTEIN

SAAR RIESLING

Erich Weber and his son Johannes make some of the most refreshing wines in the world. From bracingly dry to delicately sweetish they exemplify Riesling at its best: never chaptalized, whole-bunch pressed, aged on its lees, bottled by hand (each cask separately). They are not showy wines, quite the opposite. But with every sip you see more purity and nuance. We drink them whenever we can.

HOFGUT FALKENSTEIN

SAAR RIESLING

Erich Weber and his son Johannes make some of the most refreshing wines in the world. From bracingly dry to delicately sweetish they exemplify Riesling at its best: never chaptalized, whole-bunch pressed, aged on its lees, bottled by hand (each cask separately). They are not showy wines, quite the opposite. But with every sip you see more purity and nuance. We drink them whenever we can.